

I AM A HOMELESS PIG

REASONS WHY A PIG MAY BE UNWANTED

- Unfortunately, many pigs find themselves in this situation. It's been said that 90% of pigs are rehomed before their FIRST birthday.
- I do not like change. Leaving my home, my family and having to change my routine stresses me out and can make me really sad.
- Pigs that have been moved around from home to home tend to be untrusting. They can be trained, but it's usually different with each person.
- I do not understand why my family doesn't want me. Having to leave can make me sad and I can cry real tears.
- If given the time to acclimate to a new home, I can be trained to be a good pig.
- If my former home didn't work out, it doesn't mean that I am not a good pig. There could've been other issues besides my behavior.
- If you see a picture of me at an animal shelter, please know I am likely super scared. Please network to help me find a good family.
- I want a loving family. I want a home. I want to be loved and get belly rubs and be a part of someone's heart.
- I cannot help if my outside isn't as beautiful as my inside. Living on my own doesn't always leave me looking my best.
- I may have some behavioral issues, but please work with me, I can learn new things, I can learn to respect and love again.
- You do not know my history, so please give me some time to learn all these things about you and your family.
- Please be sure I am spayed or neutered. My surging hormones can cause me to act like a jerk. But that is the hormones, not me.
- Older pigs are just as awesome as piglets. Please understand that just because I am not a baby pig doesn't mean I am not a great pig.
- Since many people who run out and get a pig without knowing much about them, I may not have been trained. I can be though.
- Over time, I can build a trusting relationship with you....but it does take time. I have likely been betrayed at some point in my life.
- Please know that there are circumstances that sometimes leave a pig without a home and it isn't anyone's "fault".
- Sometimes my behavior is misunderstood, take the time to get to know me before giving up on me. Please consult someone with experience. It can be fixed!
